Alexis Martin Neely admitting a non-disparagement clause has existed in her contracts for over a decade on Reddit while simultaneously denying the clause ever existed on Trustpilot:

CompetitionWild4031 • 2y ago

They make their clients sign non disparagement agreements

1 Reply Share ...

AlexisKatz • 1y ago

We have removed this clause from our agreements, as it was a standard clause built in by counsel that we agree is not needed as we would never pursue someone legally for speaking truth about their experience with us. We have "courageous communication" built into our company core values, and welcome communication of truth always.

Reply from New Law Business Model

Updated a day ago

Hi John,

It's Ali, founder of New Law Business Model® and Personal Family Lawyer®. We aren't clear who you are as we only have one "John D." in our member records and that gentleman only ever paid us $200 and was only in membership for 4 months before we canceled the account for non-payment.

And it is possible you are posting anonymously, due to fear of some sort of recrimination, as you mentioned a non-disparagement clause in our contracts, which I'm unaware exists in any way that would prevent you from sharing your personal experience.